ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

With regard to my share in the writing of this Dictionary, my grateful thanks are due to Mr. Frank M. Pugh for the encouragement in the compilation of this Dictionary; to Rev. B. M. Pugh, Principal, the Synod College, Shillong for pointing out in several places the correct words to be used, the correct spelling, and punctuation; to Prof. R. S. Lyngdoh, Head of the Deptt. of Khasi, St. Anthony's College, Shillong for his valuable suggestions in enriching the Khasi Vocabulary; to Mr. Arthur G. Warren for designing the emblem of the Dictionary; to Mr. Golden Kharmujai for typing out portions of the manuscripts; to Mr. Dlan Singh Nongbri who put his knowledge of new words freely at my disposal; and to Mr. S. J. Duncan for his matured and valuable counsel in bringing out this edition in its present form.

PREFACE

Since the days of Nissor Singh no one has made an attempt to compile a Khasi-Khasi Dictionary. If there has been a silent attempt by any silent worker such work has not seen the light of the day. But U Iarington Kharkongngor has revived the interest in enriching the Khasi vocabulary by compiling a Khasi-Khasi Dictionary which he entitles "Ka Dienshonhi." I hope this work of U Iarington Kharkongngor will stand as a pioneering work in this line for the present and future generations. For the last four or five years I have watched the great enthusiasm that Mr. Kharkongngor has taken in the field of Khasi literature, with great interest. As a student of this subject he has shown his capacity that he has got a strong command of the Khasi language and a mastery over its vocabulary. This work is an embodiment of that command and mastery over the Khasi language that this young man has brought out to light. I have the privilege of having been his teacher as well as in reading the manuscript very thoroughly and I have a great hope that this work will render great benefits upon the general public and the elite of the Khasi society as well. I have a great hope that this young man will rise very high in life as an author.

Prof. R. S. LYGDOH, M.A.,
Head of the Department of Khasi,
St. Anthony's College, Shillong.

FOREWORD

Mr. Iarington Kharkongnor has taken great pains to write this Khasi-to-Khasi dictionary. It is a pioneering work of very great importance in the development of the Khasi language and of Khasi literature.

The book is by no means perfect. While there will be a great number of Khasi literati who will not agree with the introduction, in this book, of some words into the Khasi language or with the meaning given to some others, the book, I am sure, will not only meet the need of those who may not be very familiar with the Khasi language and who wish to enrich their knowledge of it, but it will also contribute greatly to the growth of the Khasi language. Many Khasi words which are dying because of the onslaught of other more powerful languages such as English and Hindi will, as the result of this effort on the part of Mr. Iarington Kharkongnor, come back to life. This work may even enrich the languages of other racial groups, our neighbours in the State of Assam.

In going through the pages of this book in the manuscript form, I have tried to indicate in several places where I question the correctness of his statements or of the words used; but as the book is entirely the result of his painstaking labour, I have tried to avoid as far as possible any imposition of my viewpoint on what the author himself considers to be the correct word, correct statement, correct spelling or correct punctuation.

I am, however, happy that the author gave me this honour and privilege to go through the manuscript. As the result of this opportunity there has grown in me a feeling of appreciation and respect for the good work which Mr.

Iarington Kharkongngor as a young man has been able to do for his own people, the Khasis. Without such efforts, the future of Khasi as a language is very dim indeed.
